

COULD AMERICA HAVE HAD TWO BROOKLYN BRIDGES?

Once upon a time...

there was a city just east of Dallas called Brooklyn, Texas. Life there was good—very good. And as the city grew, so did its needs for a post office of its own. But according to the Postal Service, that name was taken.

Luckily, Railroad Commissioner John Forney had an idea for another name he liked even better. The rest, as they say, is history.

And the bridge? Well, as it happens, Forney's new six-lane bridge spanning U.S.80 is almost finished. It connects 660 development-ready acres on one side with 1400 on the other.

[Developers: Like how we snuck that promo in?]

Just think, if we'd only had email back then, America might have had two world-famous Brooklyn Bridges and we wouldn't have had to name our new one "Gateway Bridge!"

Please visit us here at RECon
Booth S-4741

WHAT MAKES US A CITY WITHOUT LIMITS?

Over 40,000 people in our community

200,000 consumers within a
15 minute drive

Population to triple by 2030

$80M in new housing starts
within the past 12 months

30% increase in sales tax revenue last year

$88,000 average HHI

$17M in new healthcare facilities

$65M in new roads and improvements this year

8,000 kids in nationally recognized schools

Contact: Kim Buttram, 972.564.5808
forneytexasedc.org